And yet so teautifully fair,

So weary, worn with anxious care,

Robed in the gloomy garh of night

he did not ask for rest or food

But for that convent's solitude, To seek forgiveness for the past

She seemed like some atray child of light

To seek forgiveness for the pual, White life's low flickering flame might To leet her soul also lived by prayer. From the dark slus that rested there, and there from all her errors shriven. To wing her foundy flight to heaven. She heelt beside the sacred shrins, "A thing of beauty," half distine, And alie was young, though sorrow der Was ferrowd on her soft, pale cheek, And on her blow, so marble fair, was written many a trace of care,

Was written many a trace of care,

And oh! the sweet Ma lonna face

Was softened with an angel's grace

And as she knelt in wordshy there, She seemed a ajdril of the air,

Soft trembled on the breathless all

And breathed to thee, with lips apart

So fraught with thoughts of human love

As images of fretted gold.

We parted, and he wanders, free
From every burning thought of me;
White I, bowed down 'neath wrong and shaw
Must struggle through life's dikering issue,
And in my anguish, deep and wild,
Oh, Ood I cried, 'take home thy child!
But out my sorrowing spirit fell
The low chime of the convent bell,
And the a ball toward each.

badly injured. New York Items. New York, December 22.—Mrs. Elizabeth itch and her child, three years old, were bund dead to day in bed, having probably committed snicide with prussic acid. Her husband, a lawyer in good business, and a child, recently died, which probably caused insanity, and led her to poison her remaining child and herself. A portion of the New Jersey Zinc Works, in this city, were destroyed by fire last night; loss about $8,000.

All Right. BALTIMORE, December 21.—South Carolina's secession produced not the slightest sensation here one way or the other. People seemed relieved and cheerful, and the streets were gaily crowded. Business better. The prevailing sentiment seems to be, that if the North now does right, and makes honorable, manly concessions, and Southern States will cheerfully meet them
